OVERVIEW

Corey is a mass tort and product liability litigator with a passion for defending clients as national coordinating counsel in the nation's most dangerous jurisdictions.

Corey represents clients in state and federal courts across the country in all aspects of litigation. He manages clients' dockets of cases serving as national coordinating counsel and regional counsel directing and implementing strategy, working closely with local counsel firms, and efficiently managing client resources. Corey focuses his practice on defending corporate clients in complex tort cases involving product liability, premises liability, toxic tort and chemical exposure claims.

Corey's work involves defending claims arising from exposure to asbestos, benzene, silica, petroleum, diacetyl, flooring products and other chemicals. Corey has also defended pharmaceutical and medical device companies in addition to various other individual product manufacturers. His work in these fields led to an extensive knowledge of the medical and scientific issues impacting his clients' cases.

Corey manages large numbers of claims pending across the country in a coordinated and strategic manner to advance his clients' goals and minimize risk. He works directly with many of the nation's largest and most prolific plaintiffs' law firms in the most problematic jurisdictions for corporate defendants. In addition to strategically working cases up for trial, Corey negotiates cases individually and on a global basis to deliver results.

Featured Experience

A Precedent-Setting Victory

When an international manufacturer was sued by an Oklahoma resident in the City of St. Louis for premises liability, Corey and his team achieved an extremely favorable verdict that set a precedent in the state. The plaintiff alleged that he had been exposed to asbestos while working at the client's facility in Oklahoma, but admitted that – unlike some of the other 70 defendants – the claims related to the client did not arise from any contacts with Missouri. The court agreed with Corey's argument that this eliminated any grounds for the exercise of specific jurisdiction under Missouri's long-arm statute, despite the client's ongoing business contact in the state. The decision was a major development for personal jurisdiction jurisprudence in Missouri and the first of its kind following Daimler AG v. Bauman. By limiting how much the client could be sued for in Missouri state courts, Corey and his team saved the client an extensive amount of money – and made ripples across plaintiffs' bars.
