OVERVIEW

Marquis focuses his practice on public policy, particularly within the realms of food, drugs, alcohol, and agriculture.

Marquis was drawn to law by his desire to combine his love for learning with his passion for helping others. As a law student, he earned a certificate in sports law, which opened his eyes to the significant impact of the legal system on various industries.

Marquis also served as a summer associate at Husch Blackwell, where he gained a wealth of knowledge in various areas such as commercial litigation and corporate law, which helped him find his niche. An in-house internship at a major beverage company gave him a unique perspective on client needs, particularly in terms of efficiency and timely problem-solving.

Now a fully qualified attorney, Marquis assists clients with the complex regulations and intricate challenges of the food, drug, alcohol, and agriculture sectors. He brings a positive outlook on learning, people, the legal profession and is known for his ability to understand and anticipate client needs. Clients see him as a trusted advisor who always has their back.
