OVERVIEW

Paige represents clients in complex commercial litigation.

From a young age, Paige harbored a fascination with the law and the pivotal role attorneys play in shaping people's lives. This interest led her to law school, where she served in the Restraining Order and Survivor Advocacy Clinic, providing assistance to survivors of domestic abuse. The experience was an opportunity to see firsthand the impact legal representation could have.

As a summer associate at Husch Blackwell, Paige assisted with a variety of litigation matters, including product liability, premises liability, and labor and employment cases. She reveled in the opportunity to explore such different practice areas and chose to focus her career on commercial litigation, where she could represent clients from diverse industries in a wide variety of cases.

Paige's ability to break down complex laws into understandable segments make her an invaluable asset to the team. Peers and clients alike often speak of Paige's ability to balance professionalism with a genuine, approachable demeanor. She's known for her excellent listening skills, collaborative nature, and ability to synthesize different viewpoints to find unique resolutions.
